Description of research project and participant role:

This research project aims to evaluate the functionality and ease of use of the RoboAlarm system for individuals without any IT experience. To determine whether the interface, controls, and challenge system are intuitive and usable for users.

Participants will be asked to interact with the RoboAlarm and complete a set of tasks. Including setting an alarm, editing an existing alarm, and responding to alarm ringing. Participants will not be given detailed instructions on how to use the system, allowing the test to see how naturally they can understand and operate the device.

During the interaction, participants' reactions and responses will be recorded to support the evaluation of ease of use for users. This recording will only be used to aid in writing a summary of user feedback for the final project, with all participants anonymised. The video will not be shared with the teacher or included in moderation materials, and it will be deleted after the project submission on the 1st of April 2026.

Observations will be made on how easily participants navigate the menus, how long tasks take, and whether any errors or confusion occur. Participants may also be asked a small number of follow-up questions about their experience, such as what they found difficult or any challenges they encountered.

If the participant is under the age of 18, please have a parent sign the following:

I hereby consent for my child _____ to be involved in the research project as a participant according to the circumstances outlined above. I recognise that I can withdraw my student's contribution at any time.
